

Abstract

To reduce the size and the power consumption of a semiconductor device.

A first circuit having a prescribed circuit function is provided. A second circuit which can be connected to the first circuit externally gives the first circuit a non-always-used particular function so that the first circuit can perform the particular function.